HIGHLIGHTS

- President Felix Tshisekedi named mining executive and ally Sama Lukonde Kyenge as prime minister. Earlier reports suggested that Tshisekedi wanted Moïse Katumbi to be prime minister but the latter declined.
- The parliamentary power shift to the Sacred Union has continued with the removal and resignation of prominent pro-Kabila office bearers.
- Indirect calls for the secession of Katanga by a former pro-Kabila head of Independent Electoral Commission (CENI), led to his arrest.
- The Democracy Index 2020 ranked the DRC 166 out of 166 countries globally (1 is best), and 44 out of 44 in the Sub-Saharan Africa regional ranking.
- Transparency International's Corruption Perceptions Index ranked the DRC 170 out of 180 countries (1 is best).
- Human rights in the DRC took a downturn in 2020, especially in the Ituri and North Kivu provinces.
- North Kivu has the highest number of child abductees and recruits for armed groups.
- ADF (Allied Democratic Forces) insurgents killed at least 46 people across the Beni and Ituri regions while Bakata-Katanga militia separatists attacked military camps in Lubumbashi.
- Humanitarian assistance is required for 19.6 million people in the DRC.
- A renewed outbreak of Ebola is feared following a few new cases, with health officials racing to vaccinate residents.

DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF CONGO (DRC)

- By 16 February, the DRC had a total of 24 386 coronavirus cases, 693 deaths and 15 412 recoveries. The number of tests is unknown.
- Experts say host communities need to be integrated in IDP (internally displaced persons) response planning to prevent conflict.
- Management changes at Gecamines has bolstered President Tshisekedi's influence at the expense of former President Joseph Kabila.
- Efforts are being made to 're-sanction' DRC businessman Dan Gertler under the US Global Magnitsky Act.
- Illegal DRC coltan miners shun the law due to high international demand and socio-economic deprivation.
- The DRC's mining sector had been boosted by surging battery metals demand.
- The DRC's GDP is expected to grow by 3.5% in 2021 and 4% in 2022, while inflation will be an estimated 48.5% in 2021.
- President Tshisekedi could use the African Union (AU) chairmanship to increase his stature multilaterally and domestically.
- According to the International Crisis Group, the European Union (EU) needs to push the government toward reform, albeit in a manner that avoids instability.
- The US Africa Command wants to strengthen military relations with the DRC.
- Egypt wants the DRC's support to resolve the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) issue.
- President Tshisekedi is lobbying for his country to be awarded the position of executive secretary of SADC.
- DRC and Rwanda have agreed to cooperate on political, economic and security issues. They are also planning military operations to neutralise various non-state armed groups in the DRC.
